1. An airfield, about 3,000 feet square, most of which was destroyed, was located between KRALJEVO (Y 27/S 39) and the magazine ponds situated northeast of the town. It was bordered by this plant on the east and by the railroad line and road to KRALJEVO (Y 28/D 52) on the south.
2. The intact quarters were occupied by an air force unit, the soldiers of which were given infantry training. There were no aircraft. Yugoslavs did clearing work at the field.
3. Infantry training was done with the former German "34" and "42" machine guns as well as with 30-mm mortars and 50-mm antitank guns.

Comment: The KRALJEVO airfield which was heavily damaged in WWII, was reconstructed after the war. The reported location of the field is in accordance with available records. According to a report of September 1946, there were no hangars at the airfield. An administration building and three barracks are located on the western field border. There is no concrete runway. It is not assumed that an air unit is stationed in KRALJEVO.
